This documentary follows a multicultural group of theology students from Regent College (Vancouver, Canada) on a study-abroad course in Nairobi, Kenya. It focuses on the global Church and specifically on questions surrounding Christian identity in relation to culture. The documentary invites both the exchange students and viewers to think about issues of faith and identity perspectives, as well as ways in which Christianity is contextualized differently around the world.

In addition to the subject matter, this documentary raises important questions about the roles of film-makers and photographers, particularly considering the balance of power and bias.
