The international press called it 'the Bangladeshi Spring': a mass movement following the sentencing of the war criminal Quader Mollah, who was indicted for more than 300 murders, countless rapes, and arson during the Liberation War of Bangladesh in 1971.

Over the next days, unrest grew in duration and intensity. For over a month, Bangladeshis of all walks of life congregated in Shahbag, each of them wanting their voices to be heard. The documentary enquires in the rise and fall of the movement.
