4	Content of Module: The module aims to provide an introduction to the social aspects of sport and exercise. Students get familiar with concepts that can be used to analyze professional and high-performance sports. They are provided with knowledge about the influence of institutional framework factors on national success in elite sport as well as about the determinants of participation in the popular sport. Students also learn about target group-specific differences in sport needs and sport activity. In addition, they get insights into non-experimental research in sports economics and sports sociology.

5	Learning Outcomes: Students acquire fundamental insights into theoretical concepts of sports economics and sports sociology and know the current state of research on the topics covered. Moreover, they can identify fundamental economic and social problems in sports and exercise and reflect on their implications for planning sport policies, sports programs, and sports infrastructure. In general, students can practically implement basic methodological approaches to economic and sociological research and know that working with a survey- and process-generated data requires specific analytical methods.
